Have you ever been at Long Branch?—

If you have, nothing that may be here said will add to your present stock of knowledge about it. But if you have not—and this is in the range of possibilities-; and I may say with entire certainty, that most, if not all of your home readers, are in that condition, but which is, by no means, an unblissful one; then, for their sakes, and yours too, and, perhaps, for the future advantage of both—for of this I am not indifferent, let me tell where and what kind of a place it is. It is on the Jersey coust and within the limits of Monmouth county, celebrated in revolutionary history as the one within which the heroes of that period so brayely fought, and bled, and Haight, Hutchings & Co., conquered. The distance from New York to this spot is 34 miles, and from Philadelphia about ninety. From the former a steamboat comes freighted twice a day with a living mass of humanity, ha far as Port Monmouth, nineteen miles distant, over that beautiful about of water, the New York bay; on either side of which and all around it are the beautiful sights which tell you of American commercial enter-prise on a scale of unsurpassed magnitude, -of mighty bulwarks of defense against an invading foe; of imposing mansions, with wide-spread verdant lawns and of well cultivated fields and farms: the sare indices of industry, thrittand comfort. At this point the passengers take the cars and are whirled over the railread to the Branch. a distance of fifteen miles with all the speed which fire and water, combined with machinery can give it. Arrived here, they can make their selection between some dozen hotels, each, on an average, capable of accommodating from four to five hundred guests, and all, especially at this senson, are not only full, but packedly so. From Philadelphia there is a daily train with its compliment of representatives of that beautiful city. You must not sup pose, however, that these two prominent localities are the only ones which pay tribnto to this attractive spot, for if you run the eye over the register of the different other house in Western Pennsylvania hotels, you may find not only every State. but nearly every locality—of city, town and rural districts—of each one more or less represented. It is here that the polished and refined in manners—but without a higher order of native or educational intelligence, and certainly not of victuous thought and deportment from our eastern cities, mingle and commingle with those who come from the more a catern ones, and the intermediate and more remote raral districts. And although shy of each other at first, because ignorest of one and the fothers prior personal existence, seemd status at home, yet the barrier is seen removed and a Teommunity of feeling aid enjoyment becomes predominant.

All partake at the same beard and participate in the same beard and pa
